

La Prokhovorka (The False Soviet Victory

LA PROKHOVORKA

THE FALSE SOVIET VICTORY

Historical Background

The year was 1943. After the heavy setbacks suffered in Moscow and Stalingrad, Hitler was desperately booking for a military success to exploit for propaganda purposes. He set his sights on Operation Zitadelle, aimed at the Kursk salent. But from the outset, the operation went badly wrong. The salent, massively fortified by the Soviets, was full of tages. The German forces advanced slowly, held back by successive defensive lines that were extremely effective. The minefields of both sides intermingled, the Soviet artilleny pounded relentlessly, and every metre of ground was conquered at the cost of fierce fighting.

On IIIuly, there was renewed hope on the German side. The 2nd SS Parter korps managed to break through the third Soviet defensive line near Prokhorovka. Particked, the Soviet high command ordered an immediate counter-attack, mobilising all available armour. Poorly prepared, the operation came up against a major setback: the positions initially planned for the Soviet tanks had already fallen into German hands. So on the moming of the 12th, without any prior reconnaissance, the Soviet tankers launched their assault on the advance durits of the Leibstandarte division.

Weakened by several days of fighting, the 2nd Panzerkorps had lost a large part of its armour, including 60% of its fearsome Tigers (only four remained, fifteen for the whole 2 nd Panzerkorps). However, it had dug in bethind a large anti-tank ditch dug earlier... by the Soviets thenselves. Poorby informed, the Soviet attackers were unwarser of its existence. The result was catastrophic several transfer fell into the ditch, while the others, trying to get around it, were decimated by German fire.

On 12 July, the confrontation reached its climac 330 German tanks clashed with almost 800 Soviet tanks. By nightfall, the Red Army had suffered terrible losses, with around 350 tanks destroyed compared with around 50 on the Germanside.

Long celebrated by Soviet propaganda as a dazzling victory, the battle of Prokhorovka is now being reassessed in the light of Second World War military archives. Recent research by historians is revealing an entirely different reality; that of a bitter Soviet failure that was concealed for decades.

Briefing

Axis player: -7 command cards

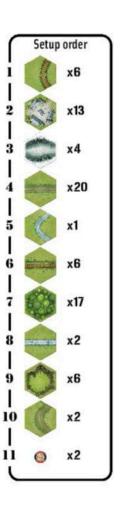

Allied player:
- 5 command cards
- You play first

Conditions of Victory

Special Rules

- Soviet tasks cannot retreat, so the flags inflict losses on them.
 Each player must discard one card each time his opponent reaches a multiple of 4 medals (4-4) and continue the battle with one card less.
 The exits counters are there for the Soviet units; each Soviet armoured unit that exits earns the Allied player a medal. In order to win the game, the Allied player must obtain at least one medal in this way Symbols & Graphics Copyright (c) 2004 - 2025 Days of Wonder, Inc. Produced with permission, for non-commercial use only.

The Battle of Prokhorovka on July 12, 1943, was one of the largest tank clashes of World War II, fought between Soviet forces and Germany's II SS Panzer Corps during the Battle of Kursk. The Soviets launched a massive counterattack to halt the German advance, resulting in brutal close-quarters fighting.

General Howitzer summarizes the results:

The Soviets called it a victory, but the truth is they threw wave after wave of tanks into a meat grinder and came out bleeding. They didn't break the German line—they broke themselves on it. The Germans held the field, but their momentum died right there in the smoke and steel. Prokhorovka wasn't a win for either side—just a blood-soaked stalemate dressed up in headlines.

12 VP's

\boldsymbol{Card}	Balance:

Allies - 5

Axis - 7

Complexity:

4

Conditions:

Countryside

Context:

Historical

Location:

Russia

Theater:
Eastern
Campaign:
Battle of Kursk
Codename:
Operation Citadel
Summary:
Objectives:
12 VP's, including Exit Medals for the Soviets
Battlefield:
A countryside with railroad tracks cutting across the battlefield.
Troops:
Allies – 5 Infantry, 12 Armor
Axis - 4 Infantry, 12 Armor
Special Rules:
There are a lot of special rules to be reviewed in the PDF.

Year:

1943

Allied Strategy:

1.

Axis Strategy:

1.

Battle Reports

Allies Won

 \circ

Axis Won

Vote See Results

Author:

Days of Wonder

Link:

Download PDF

Please follow and like us:

